

Independent Order of Odd Fellows
Dedicated Members for Change

April 8, 2013

Dear Dedicated Members for Change,

There was a time in America when being a member of a fraternal order was the norm. At the turn of the prior century (around 1900) almost 5 million Americans belonged to a fraternal order - and there were over 300 such orders in this country. In fact, the attached chart shows that the Independent Order of Odd Fellows was once the largest fraternal order in the United States, boasting 939,307 members. Today, however, Odd Fellowship in the United States totals 40,889 (as of December 31, 2011). Of that total, 4,782 are in California.

But the precipitous drop in our membership, although distressing, is not actually the most distressing fact that faces the Order. What is even more disturbing is to look at the attached list and realize that the vast majority of fraternal orders identified on the list are gone now - historical relics and footnotes. Even the mighty Knights of Pythias (once the third largest order in the USA) is today a mere shadow of itself, having less than five Lodges in the entire nation. And the Improved Order of Red Men is similarly situated, with a handful of small Lodges scattered about the west. And most of the other fraternal orders on the list are completely defunct today - having faded into history generations ago.

What does this foretell of the IOOF? Simple. If we continue down our present path, we will devolve like the Knights of Pythias and the Improved Order of Red Men - at the rate of decline we have seen, within a decade, only a few Lodges will survive. Alternatively, if we are ready to evolve into a modern fraternal order that attracts new and younger members, we can turn the tide and actually institute a resurgence in the fraternal movement.

It is for our generation to make this change. At the rate our Order is declining in membership, we simply cannot wait for the next generation to "save" us. The task is ours.
